Short notes on the most commonly used High Explosives.

Blasting Gelatine.—The strongest explosive known. It is used for drifting and tunnelling in the hardest rock such as quartz, hematite, whinstone, etc. It offers a very high degree of water resistance.

Special Gelatine 90 per cent strength.—It is used for blasting very hard rock and has good water resistance though not comparable with that of blasting gelatine.

Special Gelatine 80 per cent strength.—This is the standard high explosive and is used for tunnelling in average ground, blasting in quarries, stopping in hard ground and ripping in collieries. It is fairly resistant to water, but less so than special gelatine 90 per cent strength.

Special Gelatine 75 per cent strength.—Another general purpose explosive very slightly weaker than special gelatine 80 per cent strength.
